Workflow.com® connects with Microsoft HealthVault

Cleveland, Ohio – Workflow.com has recently agreed to work with Microsoft® HealthVault™ to provide physicians with a means of sharing health information over the Internet with their patients. The move represents the latest in Workflow.com's continued efforts to provide software that dramatically improves the practice of medicine.

HealthVault is a free Web-based platform designed to put patients in control of their health data. It helps them collect, store, and share health information with family members and participating healthcare providers, and it provides patients with a choice of third-party applications and devices to help them manage their fitness, wellness, and health.

Workflow.com plans to connect workflowPRM (Patient Relationship Management) with HealthVault to enable providers to help put patients in control of their and their family's health. HealthVault provides a privacy- and security-enhanced foundation on which providers can build innovative new health and wellness management solutions.

Features of workflowPRM include patient self-registration, medical history, and self service access to patient education materials, as well as online account access and payments. In addition, the solution will help track patient compliance with physician orders and follow-up appointments. Other features include:

- Secure messaging between patients and staff
- Online scheduling feature where patients can view existing appointments and request new appointments
- Automatic reminders for call back appointments based on individual patient needs
- Self-service updates of demographic, insurance, and medical and family history

Workflow.com and Microsoft have a strong relationship. In fact, Workflow.com has been a Microsoft Gold Partner since 2004. "Microsoft shares our dedication to providing outstanding software," said Jay Volk, president of Workflow.com. "We see connectivity with HealthVault as one more opportunity for our companies to provide valuable solutions for our clients."
